Voices matter: disputes involving Fifa World Cup

The Fifa World Cup, scheduled to be held in Qatar, has run into a multitude of controversies even before it has begun. In a letter Fifa has urged the 32 participating nations to focus on football and not get involved in ideological and political buttles. This comes in the backgrop of criticisms regarding Qatar's treatment of low-paid migrant workers hired to build the tournament infrastructure. Human Rights Watch and the International Trade Union Confederation have alleged that the Kafala system — it ties workers to a sp - leaves workers open to systemic abuse. Queen collectives have also raised concerns about Qatar's criminalisation of same-sex relationships, the World Cup ambassador of Qatar, Khalid Salman, said that homosexuality is caused by "damage in the mind". The response has been spirited. Eight European teams have committed to their captains wearing beartshaped armband: in support of an anti-discrimination campaign. The Danish team, usually in red, is expected to wear all-black jerseys as a sign of mourning for the workers who died in Qatar. The conservative view urges sport to be kept away from politics. But there is a long, defant and encouraging history of protests at international sporting events. During the 1968 Olympics, the sprinters, Tommie Smith and John Carlos, took to the podium to raise their fist — known as the Black Power salute — during the American national anthem to show solidarity with oppressed Black people worldwide. Recently, sportspersons and teams around the world have taken the knee sportspersons and teams around the word nave taken the time to conform metal discrimination. Unfortunately, implicocenses can be selective. For instance, in India, very few celebrities or sportspersons are known to lend their voices to causes that do not affect the majority population. Their difficience could stem from the fear of institutional retaliation. That is unfortunate. Sporting scons are role models for every segment of society. Their call against discrimination strengthens a democracy's compact with fraternity and equality. Those fighting for freedom in politics where freedom is restricted would undoubtedly be inspired by symbolic support from the sports fratemity. This is where global sporting competitions become important. A cry against injustice, sporting competitions become important. A cry against injustice be it from player – Kapilkumar M. Hirpara or citizen, is equally important Editor
